

TS 1034452 - DTNA Supplier (Vendor) Links

This Training Solution (TS) provides guidance when searching for service information for components and systems not owned by Daimler Trucks North America (DTNA).

When servicing a vehicle's systems, keep in mind that not all components are owned by DTNA. DTNA works with hundreds of suppliers (also known as vendors) to manufacture a vehicle product line. Service information for the components that DTNA does own, such as the Freightliner AirLiner suspension system, or Detroit-branded systems and components, can be found in Technical Communications (TechComm) on DTNAConnect.

External organizations that supply components for our vehicles will typically have their own up to date service information available online, and depending on the company, training and other communications.

When searching DTNAConnect, including DTNA Solutions for service information, keep the following in mind:

DTNA generally does not provide detailed guidelines for the maintenance and repair of supplier components. There are limited exceptions for this. The suppliers who have designed the system have a much better understanding of the maintenance and repair requirements of their systems; therefore, you will usually find that manuals refer you to the supplier service documentation.

To aid technicians in quickly finding the correct website for external service info, this post will list known websites for DTNA component suppliers below.

Please review these sites, others that you find with your own searches, TechComm, and DTNASolutions before contacting your District Service Manager (DSM) for support.

Feel free to add to this post by replying and letting us know if a link no longer works or if you find a new one.

Thank you!
DTNA Service Training

Note: Many sites have service manuals in the parts, procedures, or service menus. These menus are usually at the top of the main site. Warranty information may sometimes require a login complete with dealership information.
